PROPERTY NEWS

Property developers set eyes on price hikes in 2022

Property developers are looking to gradually increase prices in the next 12 months following the country's economic reopening. This is off the back of the recent easing of measures in October followed by more practical requirements in mid-November – a move welcomed by multiple sectors and made Cambodia a leader in regional re openings.

"I think that most developers will raise the price when the restriction is eased," said Wayne Wang, Co-Founder of LumiArch Global, one of the companies behind Le Condé BKK1.

"15% to 20% would be what most developers will do, I believe. Any lower than 10% barely alleviates the pressure developers have been experiencing. On the other hand, too much of an increase would slow down sales and reduce the project's competitiveness" he said.

Real estate markets often bounce back after external shocks either pass or become more manageable. How COVID-19 has been managed in Cambodia has allowed much of its economy to breathe after almost 2 years under a pandemic.
